MARY ANDERSON NO MORE.

The Famous American Actress, Mary Anderson, Bids Adieu to the Stage by Becoming the Wife of Mr. Antonio de Navarro—A Quiet Wedding in London—A Disappointed Groom Take Revenge by Denuding the Chapel of its Floral Decorations for Novices.

LOSING, June 18.—The strenuous efforts of Miss Anderson, and her friends and Mr. Navarro and his friends to insure the complete privacy of the Anderson-Navarro nuptials were crowned with success. The wedding party left Dr. Griffin's house together and arrived at the chapel of St. Mary's, Hampstead, at exactly eleven o'clock. Long before the arrival of the party an immense crowd, including many persons in the higher walks of life, besieged the church and vainly attempted by attacking the narrow entrance to obtain admission by storm. The door, which was kept locked, was guarded by the sexton and two policemen, who must have possessed traits of incorruptibility far above the average to enable them to withstand the temptation to accept the handsome sums that were offered by several in the crowd for a glimpse at the interior of the church during the ceremony. As the party drove up the door was opened to admit them and kept open exactly five minutes, when it was again closed and the rigid guard resumed. Nine persons, including the principals, entered the church in quick succession, and as the last one crossed the threshold the heavy door was shut with the same rapidity that it had been opened, the falling strength of its frame.

Miss Anderson was charmingly dressed in white satin, with orange blossoms and the other conventional insignia of the bride, and her step-sister, Miss Blanche Griffin, who acted as bridesmaid, was attired in white, with an enormous feather in her hat. Alfonso Navarro was the groomsmen, and Joseph Anderson gave away the bride. Canon Purcell, the parish priest, who officiated, was attended by eight acolytes.

The altar was literally covered with tiles, and the chancel was profusely decorated with palms and ferns. Nuptial mass was rendered with an organ accompaniment only, and a dozen boys in velvet with white sashes heaved the aisles with flowers as the bride and groom left the altar.

As the wedding party left the church the bride and groom were cheered by the crowd outside and deluged with rice, which was thrown from the windows of houses near the church. After the wedding breakfast at the residence of Dr. Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. Navarro took their departure for the continent.

The diminutive Hampstead chapel, where the ceremony was performed, is for many reasons the most unlikely place in London to be selected as the scene of a notable marriage. It is very difficult of access, its only approach being a narrow and dingy back street running up a steep hill. The chapel itself has an extremely dismal and forlorn appearance. Its front and roof are flush with those of the houses, and the building might be passed a hundred times without being noticed. It will seat about one hundred and fifty persons.

Although the crowd were thwarted in their attempts to witness the ceremony they did not depart without at least a small degree of compensation for their disappointment. After the departure of the wedding party the church was simply mobbed and in a few minutes completely denuded of its floral decorations which was carried off as mementos of the occasion. Not only were the flowers taken, but not a vestige of the large plants and palms which adorned the chancel was left. The only articles of especial value in the church are several rare paintings, which engaged the attention of the crowd until they were driven out by the sexton. Miss Anderson was a frequent worshipper in the little church, and has donated a large sum of money for the purpose of refitting and decorating it.
